Team Double-Shot MOCA
(Constantine, Joel, Jessica, Maddie)

In our original design, we had intended to display various "tags" such as a timestamp and latest username editor in the storypages. Essentially, we tracked this info in the databases, but due to complications in the front-end, we did not display them in the site (only on the storypages).

We also did not use hashed names for the urls.

When making new stories, you could not name a story with a title already used, whereas in our original plan, it was restricted only to the user. So you would be able to have two users creating two different stories with the same title.

We added additional html templates, such as search.html and create.html.

Login.html became the main template for every other html template.

We created extra python helper files in utils to spread out/organize the work. However, in the end, we didn't incorporate some of them.

Overall, we planned on a bit more than we could handle, due to the extra features that we wanted to incorporate into the site.